All that God wants of anyone is faithfulness. The quiet, regular, faithful performance of duty in our appointed place--that is the thing that attracts the eye of God, and that is the thing He promises to reward.

Not many of us are endowed with brilliant intellect. Not many of us can hope to achieve height, position and renown. Most of us belong in the rank and file, and will never attract much of the world's attention. There are many of us who are destined never to win notable success in a worldly way. We can not all be men of affairs. Most of the jobs in this world are small jobs, but whatever our limitations, however small that place we fill, we can be faithful. To be faithful, we do not need to be geniuses. The man the world acclaims, is not always the one God acclaims. To be faithful in which is best will win as rich a reward, in the eyes of God as faithfulness in the greatest.

There is something better than occupying high station, and having one's every act recorded for all to see. That something better is to be faithful, not genius, not fame, but faithfulness.
